

JENNIFER PAGE

Jennifer Page's writing journey started when she was 8 with a handwritten story about ponies, bound in sticky-back plastic and optimistically sent to Puffin Books. 45 years later, she finally had her first novel published – a cosy romance called The Little Board Game Café. There are now four books in this popular series.

Her published works also include short stories in My Weekly and two non-fiction books. She's currently working on her fifth novel in which she's swapped board games for campervans and Motown music.

Prior to becoming an author, Jennifer's path took several turns. She learned Dutch, taught music in primary schools, directed operas, and produced several episodes of BBC1's Songs of Praise. She even lived on a narrowboat for a time.

Jennifer now lives in an old farmhouse near Hebden Bridge in West Yorkshire with her husband Hermi, pet Labrador Pete and guide dog puppy Josh, and an extensive collection of board games – the inspiration for that debut novel! Alongside her writing, she enjoys cooking, caravan holidays, and walking in the Yorkshire countryside.
